Paradox Rocks Hosts 4th Annual Adaptive Climbing Event at 2013 Rocktoberfest

Boulder, CO – Paradox Sports will host a Paradox Rocks event at Rocktoberfest, a festival held by the Red River Gorge Climbers' Coalition located in the Red River Gorge, KY. Registration for the event, which takes place Oct. 11-13, is now open. The cost is $25 per climber and includes lunch on Saturday.

Paradox Rocks is a legendary series of weekend gatherings where people with disabilities, their friends, partners and families can rock climb during the day and gather around the campfire at night. While these weekends have rock climbing as the central theme, participants have been found hiking, mountain biking, fishing, trail running, canoeing and hanging out in the shade with a cool drink.

This is the fourth year in a row that Paradox Sports has attended Rocktoberfest. Professional climber and Paradox Sports Athlete Craig DeMartino will be running the event.

“I hope to grow the base of Paradox Sports, and to get folks out who may have never been climbing before. To see someone experience climbing for the first time is such a powerful thing and when that person is "disabled" its even more rewarding,” he said.

This event is made possible through grants provided by Mountain Hardwear and Native Eyewear. For more information, please visit <http://paradoxsports.org> or email craig@paradoxsports.org.
